DARKLEAF
South has something! The silly bastal sign I bought said: "Help Florida green . . . bring dollars money!" But, heavens to Betsy, if Appomattox lives ten more years, it will never have an opportunity like it has starting there. With the Joel Sweeny Centerpiece In our competitive world you have to use what you have to the top advantage, price is one thing and competitively . . . if you do a good job it works. It has been my privilege to live over much of America. It is there I know of no place better." But I know of no place quite like Appomattox has. It is the one spot on God's green earth I would be content to live and die. The challenge of the PIONEER is here. Will we meet this challenge? Appomattox stand up and be counted, or will we make a mistake? Will we be the leaders of failure? Have we the leadership to face tomorrow?

Basketball is growing as a major sport. I had occasion to be in Lovington one night recently, and there was a game scheduled between Appomattox and the Lovington team. Honestly H. S. My, what a turn-out of fans! I can testify that when games are scheduled between "fan-atic" rivals, the crowd will attend. So the next fact of importance is games, basketball should outdraw football as a sport for high schools.

A local sportsman suggests that fans write in their predictions as to the standings in the big leagues this season. Anyone want to "go on record?"

Sign seen by your writer in a Florida store window: "The bitterness of poor quality will be remembered long after the sweetness of low price is forgotten." Another way of saying: "You get what you pay for."

Heavens to Betsy, smart people now that "atmosphere" is a pay-off among lines of business. A case at hand is that of "The Old South Bar-B-Q Ranch" near Fort Myers, Florida. When we drove up, a guy on horseback offered a free ride to the ladies. Cowbells were ringing. An hired help had pistols and shotguns. I had three ladies with me, and the hostess said that was too many, and she "shot" one right off. Another waitress said they didn't like bald-headed men in, and so they ricocheted me up with a huge black wig, and I looked worse than all getout. But I took it, for you get into the "atmosphere" of the place. Usually blank caps, they were shooting real ones all over the restaurant. We asked for a menu, and they said they didn't have any. "You get Bar-B-Q and corn on the cob, and that's all." So we said, "bring it on." Sawdust was inches deep all over the floor. The water came from an ancient barrel, labeled, "Mountain Dew." Horse-collars, handcuffs, and desperado handbills covered the walls. Atmosphere! "Sadie, shut that guy over there at Table Three! He ain't got no sauce on his Bar-B-Q!" When they brought out the corn on the cob, they slapped you on the back and cried, "Eat like Helen B. Happy." We finally got out of the place, loaded with Bar-B-Q and corn on the cob, and an extra bottle of that special hot sauce. Fought our way through the horse-collars and sawdust, and so help me, I must say, you never knew what you were going to run into, but the boys sure "atmosphere" seem to be doing all right!

It appears to your writer that fishing is a booming sport. Friends tell me of the increasing numebr converted to this pastime, and business friends frankly admit that fishing gear is gaining in sales importance. I have not done much fishing in recent years. The local Lions Club will sponsor Darrel Walker's Arkansas Travelers, a girls' professional basketball team, here on March 2. They will play a men's team, under adjusted rules, and it should be an interesting evening for sports fans.

We were saddened, upon returning home from a brief vacation, to learn of the death of Mrs. W. A. Scott of Spout Spring. For many, many years Mrs. Moon had written the column for this newspaper from her community. That public service was because of her being in our office frequently, and we learned to respect her as a very capable and cooperative person. We have not only lost a valued news correspondent, but we have lost a friend.

We note with approval how things are coming to humming down on the Main Street in Appomattox in mid-afternoon. The schools "let out" and a large number of the cream of American Youth pours into the various business places. And about the same time, our large industrial factories turn out some of the finest workers anywhere, and they flock to the downtown business places. It is there there was "a stillness at Appomattox." But I know of no place where suddenly, at 2 P. M., there suddenly develops into a humming beehive of activity.

Basketball is growing as a major sport. I had occasion to be in Lovington one night recently, and there was a game scheduled between Appomattox and up to be counted, or will we make a mistake? Will we be the leaders of failure? Have we the leadership to face tomorrow?

New Book On Senate Officers Features Moses And Elliott

The Times-Virginian has received a copy of an attractive 144-page book, "Officers of the Senate of Virginia, 1776-1956." It is a well-written and nicely bound book, and comes from the historical research of George Wesley Rogers. Rogers is Postmaster of the Senate of Virginia. The Editor of The Times-Virginian, with the assistance of Mrs. J. A. Burke, and others, was able to provide some material used in this book, as to Wyatt Moseley Elliott.

Featured in the book are two men from Appomattox County, who were top officers in the Senate.

Wyatt Moseley Elliott was President Pro Tempore of the Senate 1879-1882. This Appomattox citizen had a tremendous career, both here and in Lynchburg, as well in Richmond. Mr. Rogers' book does not a picture of Senator Elliott, but devotes two pages to his career.

The book further gives a deserved reception to Appomattox's Senator Chas. T. Moses, and uses a full page picture of him, followed by a suitable biography. Sen. Moses is the present President Pro Tempore of the Senate, and its senior member in years of service..

These two senators are not the only ones from Appomattox who have achieved distinction in that body, but Mr. Rogers' book is given only to officers of the Senate.

FARM FAMILIES ANALYZE PROGRESS

Prospects of increased efficiency in farming operations during the coming season and evidence of progress last year are showing up on Appomattox County farms as the result of systematic check-ups on the past year's operations, Hunter P. Evans, Farmers Home Administration County Supervisor, reports.

At the end of each farm business year, those farm families using Farmers Home Administration credit to buy, improve, or operate their farms analyze their past year's business. After noting the strong and weak points in their operations, they make plans for better farming during the coming year. Assistance in this analysis and planning is supplied by the Farmers Home Administration county office personnel.

Arrangements to use this service in connection with loan funds advanced by the agency are part of each family's agreement with the Farmers Home Administration. The service is known as the year-end analysis.

To enable the farm families to make full and efficient use of their labor and increase their income, careful consideration is given to the edequacy and full utilization of their land, livestock and equipment. When necessary loan funds are provided to attain or develop the needed resources.

Wave of Flu Hits Appomattox

A wave of influenza cases is raging over Appomattox and adjoining areas. The result has kept doctors working overtime, and resulted in widespread absenteeism in industrial payrolls, schools and business places.

The illness generally strikes suddenly, and has a peak period of one to three days.

One top local employer of labor had over 20 per cent of the workers out Monday. This situation seemed typical, although a few were harder hit, percentagewise. One employer of twenty persons, had 13 out on Monday. Nearly every activity in the county was feeling the results of the flu epidemic.

School attendance was also hard hit.

This entire area of Virginia was having a similar experience. Extremely cold weather last week went along as part and parcel of the flu outbreaks. The flu seemed not to be as potent as that of World War I, when many deaths resulted. However, it is sufficiently troublesome to keep victims in bed for a few days.

Several cases have been reported of entire families down with the current type of flu at the same time.

BLOODMOBILE IS DUE HERE ON FEB. 4

A big response is desired when the Red Cross Bloodmobile makes its first 1960 visit to Appomattox on Thursday, Feb. 4. The Bloodmobile will be at Liberty Baptist Church on that date between the hours of 11 A. M. and 5 P. M.

The Bloodmobile is to visit Appomattox three times last year instead of the regular two, in order to reach the county's quota. It is hoped that the response next week will reach at least 125 pints, a normal visitation quota, so that the 1960 schedule may be off to a satisfactory start, and thus save the Red Cross the expense of extra visitations. R. V. Leffers, local chairman of this program, urges local citizens to show up Feb. 4, at Liberty Baptist Church, and aid this very worty project.
